One superior smirk from Michael Endicott convinces sixteen-year-old Georgia Barrett that the Devil wears Polo. His family may have founded the postcard-perfect New England town they live in, but Georgia's not impressed. Even if he is smart, good looking, and can return Georgia's barbs as deftly as he returns serves on his family's tennis courts. After all, if Michael actually thinks she refuses to participate in lab dissections just to mess with his grade, he's a little too sure that he's the center of the universe. Could there be more to Michael Endicott than smirks and sarcasm? If Georgia can cut the snark long enough, she just might find out. ?
