This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1888 edition. Excerpt: ... DOWN THE DELAWARE RIVER IN A CANOE. ' You can run everything on the river but the Big Foul," said the teamster at Port Jervis, as he helped us launch the canoes from a gravel bank. "Where is the Big Foul?" "Below Belvidere: you'll strike it in a few days. No boat can run that rift at this stage of the water." "Oh, it's a rift," said Moseley, standing kneedeep in the river, and packing his canoe. "I thought it was a bird. Why is it called the Big Fowl?" "It is the foulest rapid on the Delaware," answered the teamster. "I know the river to Trenton: went down last May on a fresh. You can run all the rest; but you'll have to carry round the Big Foul Rift." We had before heard about this rapid with the ominous name. A discussion in Forest and Stream, a few years ago, directed the attention of canoemen to its alleged dangers and extreme rapidity of current.* I had with me also the notes of one of the best canoemen in the country, who had run the Delaware in the spring of last year, to which I referred, and found these words : -- "Great Foul Rift, short distance below Belvidere. Ran down on rafting fresh in May. Length almost a mile and a half from head of Little Foul to foot of Great Foul. Rapidity of water and danger much exaggerated." "That's all right for a spring fresh," said the teamster, who had heard this note read. "But * Two canoemen of East Orange, X. J., who ran the rapids in 1878, and who claimed to be the first to do it, wrote as follows: "After passing through two or three small rifts, we arrived at Great Foul Rift, which is considered the most dangerous one in the river, on account of the number of rocks and the swiftness of the current. How to describe our passage through here, we hardly know; all we can say is, we saw it, we...
